My "Pixie" Problem

(self.Paranormal)

submitted 2 months ago by Pyrophile451

Since moving Into my current apartment a year ago I have begun having strange issues that I'm coming to believe are supernatural in origin. It all started with a "strange vibe" in the space that me, my brother, and a few friends all claimed to notice. Than things began disappearing more frequently, only to turn up in weird spots a few moments later. I have always had a bad habit of losing things and as a joke I began blaming the increase in disappearances on "pixies".

I believe this may have been my biggest mistake. As soon as I gave the force a name the problems suddenly worsened. Objects began to vanish in increasingly impossible ways. Chargers would disappear from wall outlets only to reappear inside laundry bins or the fridge. Objects you just set down would suddenly vanish the second you looked away only to reappear exactly where you left them hours later. Now new and more troubling occurrences have started to manifest.

I have started seeing things in the corners of my eyes when I'm at home that I don't see anywhere else. I also started to hear a loud alarm ringing, accompanied by a swell of blindingly bright light well sitting at my kitchen counter a few weeks back. I was immediately certain that I didn't own anything that made the distinctive noise or glowed so intensely. Despite this I attempted to search for a more realistic source for the event, only to show up empty handed. Even now I have not heard the sound again, nor have I found any possible source to explain the light. Yet none of these events prepared me for what I just saw earlier tonight.

I woke up around 4 in the morning and needed to go to the bathroom. As I stepped out of my room into the hallway I was greeted by a very offputting sight. About two meters away from me a perfectly spherical black entity hung suspended in mid air. It was featureless and substantially darker than the rest of the dimly light room, which my eyes were well adjusted to. It was dumping huge amounts of what looked like liquid shadow from its body onto the floor. Yet the inky fluid would vanish as soon as it hit the surface. This went on for about 30 seconds before the flow subsided and the entity vanished. Leaving no physical evidence of it's appearance that I could find.

The second this happened I knew I had to tell someone. So I figured I would tell reddit, rather than weird out the people in my day to day life. Maybe one of you can tell me what's going on. All I know is that the new entity (which I have nicknamed Orby) definitely looked right back at me. I could feel it watching me and it gave me goosebumps, which I did not enjoy. I would like to keep my "pixies" around as I have sort of grown to enjoy the sense of company and often times their antics are more entertaining than malicious. Yet if anyone has a more reasonable explanation or believes that the being(s) might be dangerous and knows a way to get rid of them please let me know.

Things disappearing doesn't necessarily mean it's a pixie. Actually, it's common for a lot of fae to do that. The fae is not necessarily a problem the black thing clearly had an intent to scare you which is worrying. I read somewhere that you can protect yourself by not reacting the way the entity want you to react. You have power over it, if you see it again and you feel like it's threatening you get angry. They only want to bully you if they get what they get the reaction they want. I hope my advice can prove useful and that your problem will be solved. :)

Sounds weird but mildly entertaining. Check your house for black mould and carbon monoxide leaks, both attributed to hallucinations.

About items moving however, sleepwalking is the only thing I can think of. You can test this by recording your sleep pattern.

If none of the above, and the problem persists arm yourself with a holy water super soaker and you should be fine 🖤

Oh yah, you've got a Fae "friend". You're like me in that you enjoy having them around. But that shadow thing is another story.

Leave offerings out for the Fae. Speak out loud specifically who it's for. I recommend being kinda vague and not naming anything outright. Just say it's for any being that means no harm or ill intent for you and your home. This may or may not work though. It's up to them in the end if they want to stick around. The one hanging around me left some months back despite me inviting it around.

Then do something similar for the shadow being but instead of leaving offerings, smudge your house and open all of the windows. Some people find success with holy water. I don't think the items or ritual mean so much as does the belief you have associated with it. Speak out loud your intent. Be clear and firm that anything with negative vibes or I'll intent is not welcome near you or in your home.

The combo of your intent and the energy behind the spoken words is stronger than any random entity messing around in your home. Sounds kinda hokey

Thank you so much for your advice! I will definitely be careful how I talk to whatever is there going forward. So many people have said that calling them by the wrong name probably upset them. I'm still not entirely convinced as I have always been a skeptic in the past. Though I think I am open to trying to be on good terms with my otherworldly roommates if they are truly there. So I will probably try some of the advice you've suggested.

[–] zazz88 8 points 2 months ago

Yeah, no problem! And I 100% understand that skepticism. That's a healthy thing to have, hold to it. I come from a family of scientists myself, one brother being a hardcore atheist whom I used to agree with on most everything. After a while though, and after so much, I realized that it might be even more crazy constantly and continually trying to rationalize away what I was experiencing on a fairly regular basis.

I'll tell you this, you don't have to believe in them if you don't want to. Believing in them only increases the encounters. It's as if something within you opens up. It's kinda a trip, one which makes me feel a bit isolated in that I can't really talk about it with most of my friends. Hence my frequent Redditting. Best of luck and let me know if you have any questions.

I've done a moderate amount of research into the Fair Folk (ie fae, fairies, pixies) and there are a lot of different "entities" that fall under the umbrella. One common dislike amongst them all though, is being improperly referred to, which I think another commenter mentioned. So calling them "pixies" could be a source of the upset. If you'd like to keep them around, I recommend putting together a little faerie garden, or leaving sweet treats or milk as offerings. If you would like them to leave, they hate the ringing of bells and iron.

However I think a poltergeist could be behind your encounters. They're known to move objects in plain sight and put them in obscure places. Also associated with electronics malfunctioning which could explain the bright light and ringing sound (the entity causing a gadget in your kitchen to behave in a way it normally would not. And generally they appear in non-humanoid form when sighted.

With the extremely limited amount of research I've done on the subject in the last few hours I actually considered a poltergeist as a somewhat likely option aswell. This Is why I've mostly avoided trying recommendations to invoke the name of god. From what I read it sounds like trying to get rid of poltergeists through the use of holy rituals or exorcism mostly just really pisses them off.

I've never heard of someone believing they had an actual encounter with fae, but I do love fae literature, so I know quite a lot about them. The most direct remedy is iron or steel. If you ever feel threatened, keep some of that close. It's said that wearing your clothes inside out also helps ward them off.

I don't necessarily believe that it's truly a fae. Describing it as pixies was mostly just a joke between me and my friends when I first started noticing weird stuff going on. Though most people seem to believe that it is some sort of fae creature. I am curious to know if that is truly what it is.

Calling them faeries started out as a joke for me too. Whatever you want to call them, they're real.

I definitely get it — that's exactly the kind of joke I would make to laugh off something as potentially disturbing as this. I hate to say it, but it really does sound more like poltergeist activity.

I do know I don't like the thought of that spherical entity gushing phantom liquid at ALL. How on earth did you recover after seeing it? If I had been confronted with a sight like that at 4 AM, I'm pretty sure I'd scream my soul right out of my body while simultaneously peeing my pants. And then I'd pray...and then I'd move.

Honestly the presence was very nonthreatening. It was only after it was gone that I felt somewhat scared. Though that fear was quickly done away with by a mix of skepticism that maybe there was a more logical explanation, curiosity at what it could have possibly been, and a belief that whatever it is either couldn't or wouldn't harm me. I don't think I'll be moving out any time soon. So me and whatever it is will just have to put up with each other.

I think everyone who is used to living in old houses has gotten that one pixie house. Even people who don't believe in it will be like "damn pixies" when something is moved. They say it jokingly but it's almost like they unconsciously know.

This perfectly describes me from a year ago. I just thought it would be funny to blame my forgetfulness on pixies. Though with things vanishing in crazier and crazier ways I'm starting to think it was more accurate than I ever could have imagined.

I think it's very cute that these entities supposedly like milk and sweets. I like to have a glass of warm milk and honey before bed sometimes. It's not quite cream, but maybe I'll try leaving some out for them and see if it has any effect.

Some household spirits that fit under the 'fairy' label but aren't actual Good Folk (e.g. brownies) are easily offended, and hate being called what they're not. They neither know nor care that humans have forgotten these technicalities.

Bless and exorcise some milk and offer it to them if you want to keep them around; use methods others have suggested below (including the Saint Michael Prayer and name of Jesus Christ) if you don't.

This concept is quite interesting to me and I am curious if trying the offering of milk would yield results. Also out of curiosity is there a way to identify what sort of entity it might be. If referring to it by the wrong name does in fact anger it I would be interested to know what it actually is.

permalink embed save parent report give award reply

The milk would calm things down, I expect - worth a try! There's no easy way of finding out exactly what they are, though there are ways (e.g. invoking an angel into a crystal to tell you: Abbot Trithemius wrote a book on it).

'Household spirit' ought to do. Though they have regional names, such as brownie and domovoy. It's worth looking up what they're called in your part of the world.

Thank you very much for your advice! I worry slightly that attempting to push out the entity may have negative consequences as my brief research into the subject of removing paranormal entities has mostly shown poor results. regarding ouija boards the answer is no, I have never tried one. Though I frequently study different religions as a personal hobby. During a study of LeVeyan Satanism I did observe a ritual lead by a close friend who is a satanist. Having studied the religion I am personally inclined to believe that this had no real negative effect. LeVeyan Satanism is a atheistic religion that doesn't call on any real entities, but rather uses the term satan as a name for the force that drives natural instinct. Plus the ritual in question was performed after I had already begun observing some of the strange events. Still it could possibly have had effect so I figured I would mention it.

Don't these sort of things tend to get worse and worse over time?

I don't know what the heck it is.

Pray to archangel Michael to always keep you safe (if you don't object to that sort of thing). You don't have to be catholic nor christian to pray to him.

You could also ask a priest of whatever religion you prefer to bless the house. However, I've also read that sometimes that makes it Worse.

another thing is: claim the house, claim the space for yourself. Like:

This is My house and you are not welcome here! Leave now! Only I am allowed here!

(You can also add: me and my guardian angel, me and God, me and god's angels, etc).

Don't keep the "pixies" around either.

Good luck.

Look up the auto-kinetic effect. In a sensory phenomena. In darkness the eye sometimes tend to dilate in a way not to get over exposed, which can make dark places much darker and light places lighter even though nothings actually changed. Lots of things can trigger it like fear, surprise, focus etc. I think this is usually only under the circumstance of poor illumination. Also I'm sorte confused on whether you want this pixie/entity in your house, if you dont just avoid giving it any attention or significance in your life and it might soon go away. Stay safe!

I read briefly into the auto-kinetic effect and It could possibly explain the object I observed. You are probably right about just ignoring it. I have long leaned towards being skeptical. Perhaps I should try to return to that mindset and hope that the phenomenon will stop as a result.
