Discussion I wonder if Elections Stir Up the Whitehouse Ghosts. (self.Paranormal)
submitted 2 months ago by Katie_Prophet

Not a political stance, but I wonder if elections stir up the ghosts at the White House. I know that there's been a long history of sightings, especially when the country is in turmoil. I wonder if the elections make it more active.

Can you imagine Jefferson playing his violin as spookily as possible, and just following a new president around because he dislikes him .

Or Lincoln misplacing all the left shoes because he thinks that will be a hilarious way to welcome the new family.

Ghost Adventures: White House Edition? Lol just kidding. But seriously, big changes in a location that has any paranormal activity can stir up said activity. I'd love to be a fly on the wall to see it at the White House.

I know there are White House ghost stories, not aware of elections having an effect on them though.

I mean, realistically we don't hear about that many WH ghost stories. I'm sure there's many more people who've had experiences. That's why I wonder if more staff came forward, if we'd see an increase in activity around election/transition of power.

Huh, I guess we just don't know. I know the Internet gives White House staff a place where they can post anonymously. Iirc there was a story where Winston Churchill was staying in a certain room in the White House and apparently he saw something and didn't want to stay in that room anymore.

I've seen that story. They found him asleep in the room across the hall. And Queen Wilhemina of the Netherlands experienced something that caused her to faint....

Oh man. Kind of a crazy experience for those foreign dignitaries...

Especially since Lincoln is prone to being a very clear, full bodied apparition.

I am one who would be thrilled to see Lincoln honestly.

Think the majority of the presidents have been turning in their graves the past four years, anyway

Probably longer than that.

Possible. I think there's a legend about people seeing a black cat somewhere in DC before a national crisis.
