Experience An experience i had just a bit ago. I really hope this isn't paranormal. (self.Paranormal)

submitted 2 months ago * by thespooksterman

So basically, to preface this, I live in a very rural area, and there's deep woods by my house. Just a few minutes ago, I started hearing a weird noise. It sounded like whistling. Not the wind whistling, but a human whistle. Very loud, enough to be heard from inside my house. It was a simple tune, one high note, one low note. Anyway, this was coming out of the woods. It started as one of these patterns about every 4 or 5 seconds, then took about a minute-Long pause and started again, this time without any pause at all between the high and low notes or sets, and much faster. I thought it was just my imagination, but then my neighbor's dogs started barking at it. Then, out of nowhere, it stopped. Then, another, similar noise started about 2 minutes later, except it sounded like someone playing panpipes or another similar instrument, with a haunting tune. The neighbor's dogs barked even louder at this. It's been on this stop-start-stop pattern for a while now, and still going while I write this post. My little brother who was playing outside with a friend came in, and I asked him if he heard it, and he said he did. So did the friend. I really, sincerely, want to believe this is just the wind. Until I get confirmation it is, I know one thing for certain. I'm never going in those woods again.

EDIT: There's something I forgot to mention. When I attempted to record it, it could not be heard in the video. Every other background noise could. I don't know what this means, but it weirs me out.

Um ... I probably shouldn't suggest this ...

If you want to record it, maybe whistle LATE at night, and wait for a response. Do it from a safe place.

I've heard of bigfoot whistling...but never playing a panpipe. That is absolutely bizzare. A panpipe playing ghost sounds pretty wierd, yet so does a panpipe playing crackhead in the forest. It's a time of the year where some late birds might be migrating. Any chance it could be bird noises?

It would have to be a pretty loud bird, given I heard it through an entire forest and the walls of my house.

It's just Pan having a laugh. No reason to worry. There hasn't been a Pan-related injury in over 2000 years.

Besides the Pan-demic and Pan-creatic Cancer. Oh and the poor souls killed by Lo-Pan in New York a few decades ago.

Either it's a human intruder or paranormal. Not sure which is worse.

An intruder in the woods?

permalink embed save parent report give award reply

[-] uwodahikamama 2 points 2 months ago

Yes, intruder, if that's their property then someone is intruding on their property and doesn't belong there.

[-] thespooksterman [S] 3 points 2 months ago

Nope. Neither our nor our neighbors' property, but I see your point.

Only reason I think it could be a human lurking about in the woods is because there are stories in LNM about humans lurking around in the woods, luring and attacking or chasing people. Pretty freaky and some of them are just plain bizarre and unhinged. But it may not be human at all.

Sounds scary as hell. If that's what it is, I certainly am not going in there.

Yeah I wouldn't recommend it, be careful!

If there is an industrial plant anywhere nearby (even 30-40 miles off) they can make this weird whistle that will last for a fee seconds to a few minutes.

The sound is steam pipes, and can travel for many many miles, especially if you've got the super cold air outside right now.

If it was more animal sounding, I would suspect a fox. They didn't make that song for nothing after all. "What does the fox say?"

No industrial plant. It didn't sound like an animal. It literally sounded like someone in the woods playing panpipes.

Pipe music from woods is usually paranormal, but if you carry iron and can turn your top inside-out in a hurry it's perfectly safe to go into them.
