Faceless person on the train. (self.Paranormal)

submitted 2 months ago * by ADefenselessGoat

I've seen something spooky once at work. I was working at a manhole on the platform of the DART rail , (Dallas) it was around midnight, and one of the trains stopped at the platform to let off passengers. Anyways as I was looking around I saw into the windows and saw a person or something sitting in a chair facing to where I would be able to see their face. Except that the face or lack there of was just pitch black. The cars are very well lit, and I can see people's faces lit up just fine but this one was like looking into a black hole. Nothing. To make it more clear, there was a hood pulled over the top of the head, it was cold that night. So it was a pitch black face surrounded by a hood.

Oh kind Sire, the situation I was certainly similar to the one which thou hath posted on reddit. At the time I was but a maiden of fourteen pea brained and air headed. I used to spur stories of ghouls and antic of malicious entities as dogmatic statements uttered by men who while time. Oh boy! How utterly mistaken I was. I was a new moon night. The sun had barely settled and soon after it covered behind the darkness , obsidian darkness that covered the tiny neighbourhood. I was return home after chewing and gnawing the brains of my teachers. Humming a gay tune I skipped past multiple abodes and shot into the cluttered alley. Under an electric pole a woman sat crying. I slowly moved towards her. "Honestly, lily(I call every other lady in a white gown lily) why are you wasting your precious tears!" She turned back. SHE HAD NO FEATURES ON HER FACE. I turned back and ran out of the alleyway. I never once stole even a glance back.....

Edit: why am I receiving so much hate? I am not mocking the original post, it is just that my writing style is a little bit eccentric

I think your writing is GREAT!! It made it seem as if I was reading something from the baroque period. I could picture everything you wrote.

It annoys me that someone using such flowery words doesnt know that the article "an" comes before "ornamental" instead of "a"

I've seen something exactly like this before too while randonauting. I'm glad I'm not the only one... I couldn't stop thinking about it for weeks after it happened. Like people above said, it could've been a mask I guess. But I remember how deep that pitch black was, and I dont think any mask could look like that.

Hey, I've seen it too. Walking home and this man was sitting in the stairs by himself. Couldn't see any facial appearance because he had all black. It was weird because there were light post and lights in my neighborhood. Told my dad to check it out, but right as my dad got out he was gone. When I looked straight to him, he kinda looked at me, but nothing in his face just darkness, just the color black, like a extremely black dark hole.

I have a friend the commutes to Dallas via DART and in broad daylight he saw someone with half their face gone. He said they smelled bad and that it was probably some kind of infection eating away at their face. Could be possible that someone like that might eventually cover up and wear some kind of mask.

I've lurked on here a while, and living my short 22 years this is the first thing I've ever seen that I've considered abnormal, so any inconsistencies that may be found I'm sorry. I'm sure there's a rational explanation, but I couldn't conjure up an idea given the short amount of time I had to look and try and process what I saw. Just a spooky thing I've seen.

I had 2 guys in the bottom of a manhole, I stay up top. I'm not allowed to leave them for safety purposes. Also, I can't get on the train without a ticket to scan? It's not an option to just up and leave my job because I saw something.

☺☺ I'm not sure, but it looks like when you have a Reddit subscription, they give you some free awards for you to share... So, if the person run out of awards, or bought the cheapest ones (nothing wrong with that), then that's why they gave the wholesome one ☺☺

Reddit should have more varied reactions awards accessible (especially one like this ☹ for this subreddit) but I'm guessing if more people subscribe, then Reddit could do that in the future

It might've been someone wearing a ski mask or there was a shadow, but still creepy

permalink embed save report give award reply

[–] amborg 4 points 2 months ago*

There's no way that it could have been an extremely dark-skinned person? Or someone wearing a ski-mask?

Edit: The same thing happened to me today, coincidentally! Broad daylight, about 1PM.

Apparently there are "full face masks", there's only a small slit for the eyes. He had his hood up, and was looking down at his phone. From my perspective his entire face looked like a black void. As I walked by, he looked up and it made sense.

permalink embed save report give award reply

[–] AsratUprising 9 points 2 months ago

Being darkskin doesn't mean their skin absorbs light. He would still be able to make out a human face being lit by the lights

permalink embed save parent report give award reply

[–] amborg 2 points 2 months ago

I thought it may be plausible that the hood would create just enough shadow to make the person look "faceless".

permalink embed save parent report give award reply

[–] AsratUprising 1 point 2 months ago

He already explained in the post that the train car is very well lit and he could see everyone's face. Being dark skin wouldn't make it harder to see their face. Light would reflect on their face and their eyes. Ski mask would also reflect And be visible

I made an edit to my original comment, but the same thing happened to me today! He was wearing a "full face mask" with his hood up, and was looking down at his phone. I was definitely creeped out until he actually looked up at me once I got closer!

Any chance the light across from the thing was out and the light above/behind was just casting a very deep shadow?

permalink embed save report give award reply

[–] ADefenselessGoat [\[S\]](#) 7 points 2 months ago

I've tossed around a few ideas in my head. I had about 30 seconds to just stare at it while the train was stopped. But I couldn't make out any distinct shape to the face that could be a mask. It was smooth and like looking into a void. The lighting in the train has never cast a shadow that I couldn't see someone's face. They're pretty well lit inside and it being 2am there's usually one passenger or maybe two in a car. In this case just one passenger, the one I saw.
