Unexplained Possible Modern house haunting

(self.Paranormal)

submitted 2 months ago by EatingSnacksNCrying

Activity has switched up in the house so I've decided to post about it. This will be kinda long, it's my first post on this subreddit since lurking around on it.

Some backstory: My family and I currently live in a house in an HOA neighborhood that has only had one previous family in it before us as far as we know, so it's not an old creaky house. We have an "In-Law suite" connected to the house through the living room that we use to house guests, and from what we know it was originally built by the previous owners for their ailing grandmother, who did end up passing away in the room. About a year ago, my own grandfather also passed away in the room.

Activity that I know of started when my partner stayed the night in the room a while back, and that next morning told me he felt something poke him hard in his back as he was trying to fall asleep. More recently our aunt stayed over, and I just learned that during the night she felt something push her on the back while she was in bed.

My sister and I also use the room to watch our Netflix series together and hang out, and often we both would hear noises come from the bathroom, like shuffling or clinking sounds as if things are being moved or touched. We stay up pretty late sometimes, after everyone has gone to bed, and that's typically when we'd hear things.

Last night my sister was shaken up by something that she couldn't explain. She came into my room and woke me up and, visibly shaken, told me someone was tapping on her door and walking around our upstairs walkway. Our parents were both asleep, along with our grandmother as well so she had thought I came to ask her something but only found me in bed. Half asleep I was trying calm her down and tell her to tell it off because again, it was too damn late to be playing the knocking game with us.

She eventually closed my bedroom door and not a minute later I heard the tapping from outside my room, and I heard my sister's door open and her rushing to my room to ask me if I heard it, which obviously I did, but was too drowsy to be engaged. I fell asleep soon after, but apparently it happened a third time, I which she'd had enough and woke up our dad who checked the while house for an intruder and found no one. I sleep like the dead, so I had no idea until she told me this morning. 😊

Other than these once and a while occurrences, there's really no negative energy or heavy feeling in the house, and non of the activity has been malevolent, which is something that has me wondering about what this could be.

Because others my partner, aunt (who have only met once) and myself have also experienced things and have had shared experiences, I know there definitely has to be something.

I'm not one to really give into the activity as I see that as giving gratification to whatever it might be. honestly I would half jokingly say out loud that "Hey dude you gotta knock that off, it is too damn late for that nonsense." I believe in spirits, but I believe in things pretending to be spirits even more, so when I hear things I don't react because I believe giving in give that negative energy power and incentive to do more. (But of course not reacting could also make it do more but ☐☐☐)

Have any of you had experiences that aren't constitent and only occur once and a while? I don't know what to make of the activity in my house.

Well, there you go -- you had multiple deaths in the house. And perhaps your partner has something attached to them, since you say it started when your partner first stayed the night. My first thought is always to put a digital recorder somewhere you think there's activity. I don't believe EVPs are in real-time, but what you capture may be benign or disturbing.

He might, but my partner doesn't typically have paranormal experiences elsewhere, so I'm not sure if the attachment is to him, but it's something I'll ask him about today to find out more. But to clarify he was the first one who came to me about something unusual happening to him in the house.

EVP would actually be something to look into, thanks! I think it'd be interesting to see what comes up, if anything
