A loved one saying hello?

My dad passed away from diabetes a year ago in September, from what I learned he wasn't taking care of himself because of depression, and had to get a foot amputated... The last time I saw my dad was when I was about two and the first and last I talked to him I was in 4th grade. I was told about his passing when I was 35 weeks pregnant and 23 years old. (yes I have been searching for him throughout the years and never got a helpful lead) I decided to ask for help on buying a plane ticket since he was located in Atl, GA. & had my mother come with me. I had been crying everyday since I found out and I booked tickets for a flight out Friday night to be there by Saturday so I don't miss his "velorio" in spanish but ceremony to make it simple. His burial was going to be in Guatemala, so that is why I just had to fly out to GA and I have never flown before nor have a passport. I meet my uncle for the first time and we are driven to his house and then drive back to the funeral home where I see my fathers reflection on a mirror... in which I was trying to hide from first seeing him since it was all already to much...

This information i believe is important because there was nothing more that I wanted than to meet my dad again, and I was told by his friends about how he had always talked about me, would always bring my name up and how he had found my mom on fb but said, he said himself he felt like a coward to reach out.

Now this past September I would come back from work at night and I would enter my room I smelled (if some of you are familiar with the Georgia peach scent from b&bw) but it was only at the door of my room because I had gone to close the window since it was open, my room was cold and I noticed the smell was gone ? It happened two more times and again only at entering my room when it hit me, no where else. The third and last time it happened I noticed the smell was that of Georgia peach bc I had a unlit candle that I had stored in my closet and I opened it to smell it, I saw the date when I turned and saw my calendar and realized that was when my dad passed. I told my fiancé when he got home later that night and he just said "well its your dad finally reaching out to say hi."
